But who else is responsible for advancing early childhood education at the federal level? CAUCUSES What Is a Caucus? They are also responsible for evaluating existing programs, reviewing proposed regulations, and analyzing pending legislation, among other duties. Formally, caucuses are formed as congressional member organizations through the House of Representatives; in the Senate, they are informal. In addition, the Department of Labor can be an important partner, particularly when it comes to the early childhood workforce. Key Senate Committees Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions (HELP) Relevant subcommittee: Children and Families The Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions (HELP) Committee has jurisdiction over the country's health care, education, employment, and retirement policies. At HHS, the most relevant offices are within the Administration for Children and Families, including the Office of Planning, Research, and Evaluation and the Office for Early Childhood Development, which includes the Office of Child Care and the Office of Head Start. Committees have staff, and advocates may meet with committee staff, in addition to meeting with the personal staff of their members of Congress. The committee also oversees programs under the Social Security Act, including Medicaid, the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP), and Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF), parts of which states use to finance child care. 1 Appropriations Relevant subcommittee: Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies The Senate Appropriations Committee—the largest committee in the US Senate—controls the discretionary spending for the federal government, writing legislation that decides annually how much funding will be spent where and on what, across different government agencies, departments, and organizations. Committee members are responsible for legislation such as the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA, now known as the Every Student Succeeds Act, or ESSA). Here are some key players you should know. At the Department of Education, the most relevant offices include the Office of Early Learning, the Office of Elementary and Secondary Education, and the Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services (OSERS), which oversees Part B and Part C of Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). Committees Caucuses Federal Agencies You're ready to raise your voice on behalf of high-quality early childhood education and educators. COMMITTEES What Is a Committee? Key House Committees Education and the Workforce Relevant subcommittees: Early Childhood, Elementary, and Secondary Education; and Higher Education and Workforce Development The House Education and the Workforce Committee, the counterpart to the Senate HELP Committee, has jurisdiction over education and workforce matters, including CCDBG and Head Start, as well as higher education. The Senate has 20 standing committees; the House has 21. At the White House, the Domestic Policy Council is the critical body that typically acts on the President's agenda, offers advice, and coordinates the policy-making process. A congressional caucus is a group of members committed to common themes or legislative objectives. Finance Relevant subcommittee: Social Security, Pensions, and Family Policy The Senate Finance Committee is responsible for taxes and revenue; any legislation that has to do with taxes must come through this committee. Leadership, members, and staff of the following committees should be considered priority members related to all early childhood advocacy efforts. Here are some of the key caucuses and groups you need to know who are, or may be, interested in advancing early childhood education and educators: Congressional Black Caucus Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues Congressional Community College Caucus Congressional Hispanic Caucus (Democratic) and Congressional Hispanic Conference (Republican) Congressional Labor and Working Families Caucus Congressional Pre-K Caucus (bipartisan) Republican Main Street Partnership FEDERAL AGENCIES Key Federal Agencies The scope of issues in early childhood education, which includes children birth through age 8, is primarily addressed in the US Department of Health & Human Services (HHS) and the US Department of Education (ED). Where should you begin? Ways and Means Relevant subcommittee: Human Resources The House Committee on Ways and Means, which is the counterpart of the Senate Finance Committee, is responsible for raising the revenue required to finance the federal government, including control over taxes, and also has jurisdiction over programs authorized by the Social Security Act, including Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) (NOTE: In the Senate, the Finance Committee has jurisdiction over Medicaid; in the House, the committee with jurisdiction over Medicaid is actually the House Energy and Commerce Committee.) Appropriations Relevant subcommittee: Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies The House Appropriations Committee, like the Senate Appropriations Committee, controls the discretionary spending for the federal government, allocating dollars across the different government agencies, departments, and organizations on an annual basis. The Subcommittee on Children and Families also oversees critical pieces of early childhood education, including the Child Care and Development Block Grant (CCDBG), Head Start, the Higher Education Act, and other issues involving children, youth, and families. Congress also has coalitions, study groups, task forces, and working groups that can serve similar purposes. Start with the officials you elect—you are their constituents, and they value hearing from the people who live in their states and districts and who vote them into (or out of) office. Where are the decisions about policy, financing, and oversight made? 1 In FY 2014, states spent $2.6 billion of federal TANF funds on child care, either directly or through a transfer to the Child Care and Development Fund. They, along with their subcommittees, consider bills and oversee agencies, programs, and activities in their specified area or jurisdiction. Each party assigns its members to committees, and each committee distributes its members among its subcommittees. Both chambers of Congress have additional joint and select committees. The chair of each committee and the majority of its members represent whichever party is the majority party in that chamber at the time. The minority party also has members assigned to the committee, and the leader of the minority side on the committee is called the Ranking Member. The Office of Management and Budget creates the President's proposed budget each year. A committee, in the context of the US Senate and the House of Representatives, is a subgroup of elected officials who take on specific tasks for a certain area of policy or governance.
